The North Pacific Ethelemen's Ship To Wilhalenden. It is singular what chifts love will make to accomplish its objects. Bolts, gates and bars are of little avail against Cupid's pick-lock contrivances; his cunning will devise ways an I means to open them all. A young gentlema had courted a fair damael of this city, and it was supposed the two in time would "become one." Some little quarrel of a trivial nature, as lovers' quarrels generally are, occurred. Neither would couless the wrong to be on their side—presents and correspondence were mutually sent back, and the match was bruken off. The young gentleman immediately started off to New Orleans, to enter into commercial pursuits, thinking that distance would iessen the attachment he really felt for the young lady. When woman is injured, or thinks she is injured, by the one she loves, she is more apt than the male set "to bite off her own nose," as the saying is, to inflet pain and to be revenged on the offending object. A gentleman that the young lady had once rejected renewed his proposals and was accepted within a week after her old lover had embarked for the South. On reaching New Orleans he found that distance, instead of weakening his attachment, only made the lady dearer, and he became melancholy and low-spirited. The first letter he received from New York from a friend of his, announced that the old fiame was to be shortly married to another. His caurse was quickly taken; the next morning found him on board a packet ship bound for Gotham. The passage, unfortunately, was long, and the poor fellow chafed and fretted so much that the passengers began to think him deranged, or a fugitive escaping from justice. The instant the vessel touched the wharf, he darted for the office of his friend, the lawyer. It is to be supposed the latter was much surprised to see his friend, imagining him a couple Serving a Subpons. TRENTION I—The undersigned offers the highest cash market rules for the above articles, deliverable at Honolulu clay of the ports of the Islands. LIBERAL The first whate that we need the Bomb Lance on was killed in the following marrier.—The boat went alongside of the whale and the boat-stegrer fired a Bomb into him and then fastened to him with a gig iron: the Bomb was heard to explode, and the whale did not blow after the Bomb exploded. The above-mentioned whale was in the ice, and it is our opinion that we should not have got that whale and many others that we did get, if it had not been for your Bomb Lance. If we fully recommend them to the attention of those fitting out whale ships. Respectfully yours, Thomas Wall, Master back George. JUST RECEIVED.
